

David Rettinger

A teacher, administrator, and scholar with over two decades of experience, currently serving as an Applied Professor and Undergraduate Program Director at the University of Tulsa. He holds a Ph.D. in Psychology from the University of Colorado, Boulder and a Bachelors from the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor.

David has authored several influential books, including "The Opposite of Cheating: Teaching for Integrity in the Age of AI" (2025) and "Cheating Academic Integrity: Lessons from 30 Years of Research" (2022) both with Tricia Bertram Gallant. His research has been widely published in psychology and education journals, and he has presented his findings at numerous international conferences, such as the Annual Meeting of the International Center for Academic Integrity and the AAC&U Conference on General Education, Pedagogy, and Assessment. His work has been featured in prominent media outlets such as the CBS Morning Show, The New York Times, The Washington Post, Inside Higher Education, and The Chronicle of Higher Education.

David's international experience is extensive, having delivered keynote addresses and workshops in countries like Nepal, Montenegro, and Mexico. His Fulbright Specialist appointment in Nepal in 2023 highlights his global impact on academic integrity. He also served as President of the International Center for Academic Integrity, where he led their research efforts, particularly the revision of the McCabe-ICAI Academic Misconduct Survey.

In addition to his research and international engagements, David is a dedicated educator. He taught at the University of Mary Washington for over 15 years, where he held various positions, including Professor and Director of Academic Integrity Programs. He has taught a wide range of courses, from introductory psychology to advanced courses in cognition. He leads a study abroad program in Nepal that has introduced more than 50 undergraduates to that amazing country and its people. His teaching philosophy emphasizes active student engagement and the importance of research in education.

David lives in Tulsa, Oklahoma, with his wife and daughter. His commitment to academic integrity, combined with his extensive teaching and international experience, makes him a respected figure in the academic community.
